APRIL 1990

A CELEBRATION OF GARDENS

The San Francisco Landscape Garden Show, "A Celebration of Gardens," fills the Herbst Pavilion (Pier 2) and the Festival Pavilion (Pier 3) with intimate outdoor garden settings, horticultural exhibits, nursery displays, shops, demonstrations, lectures, a Children's Discovery Center and more. Photo: Janice Tong, 1988

Thirty unique settings created by well-known Northern California landscape professionals demonstrate the beauty and excitement of gardens at the Fifth Annual San Francisco Landscape Garden Show, "A Celebration of Gardens." Presented by the Friends of Recreation and Parks, a nonprofit group that funds special projects of the city's Recreation and Parks Department, in association with The San Francisco Chronicle, the show has raised over $400,000 since 1986.

The organization's goals in presenting the event are to delight and educate the public about garden design and horticulture; to introduce the talents of Bay Area landscape professionals and suppliers; to serve as a forum for the exchange of ideas among landscape professionals and garden enthusiasts; and to raise funds for exceptional unbudgeted park and recreation projects in San Francisco.

This year for the first time, the show fills both the Herbst Pavilion in Pier 2 and the Festival Pavilion in Pier 3 at Fort Mason. It includes over forty retailers offering plants, books, artwork, tools, and other accessories; unusual exhibits by local horticultural organizations and plant societies; nursery displays featuring new and familiar plants available to Northern California gardeners; a Children's Discovery Center displaying mini-gardens created by San Francisco schoolchildren and special hands-on activities for the young gardener; and hourly lectures and demonstrations.

Two cafes are open throughout the show, each offering delectable delicacies in a garden setting.

A gala Preview Party, open to the public, takes place on Tuesday, April 24, from 6 to 9pm, with admission of $100 per person. The show is open Wednesday through Sunday, April 25 through 29, with admission of $8 for adults, $1 for children under 12 when accompanied by an adult. Discounts for prepaid groups are available. For further details, see listing inside under April 25, or call 221-1310.

THE SPIRIT OF EARTH DAY

On April 22, Earth Day 1990 will be celebrated in communities throughout the world. Thus begins a series of events to continue during 1990, marking the 20th anniversary of the first Earth Day, acknowledging significant accomplishments towards creating an ecologically sustainable culture, and focusing attention on the important challenges that we all face if we are to succeed in this effort.

In many ways, Fort Mason Center grew out of the spirit that characterized Earth Day 1970. We join those celebrating what has been accomplished and looking to the challenges ahead.

A few months after Earth Day 1970, two groups of people got together in San Francisco and Berkeley and created the first two ecology centers in the United States. They were somewhat different in approach. The Berkeley Ecology Center focused on national and global issues, and twenty years later they still are doing this successfully.

The San Francisco Ecology Center, seeing "ecology" as meaning "the study of place," focused on the unique qualities of the city, and took action to preserve what contributed to a healthy environment. This meant focusing attention on restoration of San Francisco's many creeks emptying into the Bay and the Ocean, looking at our urban wildlife and preserving its various habitats, protecting open space, and preserving the rich plant and flower communities within the city.

But the Center's involvement went beyond these more obvious elements. Also incorporated were urban design, street artists, an examination of where the materials we live with come from, the activities of San Francisco's rich artistic and performance community, and the various cultures that certainly are an important characteristic of San Francisco's ecology.

The Center started a vegetarian restaurant in its storefront, used the walls of the restaurant to create an Environmental Art Gallery featuring local artists' work, invited guest speakers for a public lunch program each day, held press conferences on issues of importance to the health of the city, and shared office space with several groups that were working to improve and sustain a healthy and enriching lifestyle.

The Ecology Center became a common ground for the vast array of people, groups, interests and ideas that make San Francisco unique, and that contribute to its long-term health and sustainability. Significantly, the Center was self-supporting, operating not with grants but rather with support from its restaurant, gallery, shared office rental, memberships, and rental of the Center's space for evening and weekend classes and meetings.

I was fortunate to be the director of the San Francisco Ecology Center from 1975 to 1978. Our relationship with the Berkeley Ecology Center was close before and during this time. Both Centers were successful in their own ways, serving related but some what distinct goals. Both spaces were under 3000 square feet, small in scale but large in vision and ambition.

In 1977, when Fort Mason Center opened under a cooperative agreement between the National Park Service and the private, nonprofit Fort Mason Foundation, it seemed that perhaps both of these visions could find expression in the 350,000 square feet of space that would ultimately be available for cultural, environmental, educational, arts and peace programs for the residents of the Bay Area and visitors.

The slogan "think globally, act locally" has been used by some as a guide for action related to creating sustainable patterns of living on the planet - patterns that will ensure the continued enjoyment of those qualities that make San Francisco, the Bay Area, California, the United States and our planet unique.

Our goal at Fort Mason Center has been to be a positive model in this effort. We recognize that there is much in the Bay Area that we all can learn from, and we have attempted to attract this diversity to Fort Mason Center. We respect the need for balance, and its importance to any system that seeks to be self-sustaining. And we value openness to change, the ability to adapt to new opportunities, needs, or ideas.

Fort Mason Center is succeeding because of the cooperation among all the constituencies that use it: resident and non-resident organizations, the public attending events, the neighborhood, the GGNRA, the media, the funding community, and the Fort Mason Foundation Board and staff.

Earth Day speaks to the need to make a shift from competition to cooperation as a paradigm for how we can enhance life on the planet. Cooperation becomes increasingly important now that resources are scarce. Fort Mason Center was created in that spirit and has continued to operate in that spirit. This is why, this month, we acknowledge our support for Earth Day 1990, and urge you to participate in some of the 1000 events that will be occurring in the Bay Area and to find ways of incorporating into your daily life the values that Earth Day 1970 and 1990 represent.

EARTH DAY 1990

There are many activities planned in and around San Francisco celebrating Earth Day 1990. Nearby Crissy Field will be the site of a large festival on Earth Day itself, April 22, to include a morning walk/run, demonstrations, educational activities, and inspirational music throughout the day. For information about Earth Day events, call the San Francisco headquarters, 346-5263.

SAVE THE DOLPHINS

"Where Have All the Dolphins Gone?" is a one-hour documentary narrated by George C. Scott dealing with the killing of dolphins during tuna fishing operations. The film is the end result of two years of production and includes never-before-seen footage of the fishing techniques that result in the trapping of dolphins. The film will have its television broadcast premiere on April 22, Earth Day 1990, on The Discovery Channel, seen at 6 and 10pm Pacific Time. The film was produced by the Marine Mammal Fund and the American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

In addition to this nationwide broadcast, the film will be shown at a benefit premiere on Saturday, April 7 at 8pm at Fort Mason's Cowell Theater, presented by Earth Island Institute and the Marine Mammal Fund. Each year over 130,000 dolphins are killed during fishing operations of the tuna fleet in the Eastern Tropical Pacific. Since the 1960s, over six million Spinner, Spotted, and common dolphins have died during the netting of fish marketed as chunk light canned tuna. The documentary focuses on this slaughter, and the inability of the Marine Fisheries Service, the Congress, and the tuna industry to find adequate solutions to the problem.

Admission to the Cowell Theater showing is $6, with all proceeds benefitting the Earth Island Institute's Save the Dolphins Project. The Marine Mammal Fund and Earth Island Institute's Rainforest Health Alliance are based at Fort Mason Center. For information about the film, call 788-3666.
